

Intel IT: Maximizing the Business Value of IT

IT Strategic Planning provides an investment roadmap to better align IT with the needs of the company

A solid strategic planning process is critical to the long-term success and health of any organization. Intel IT has been able to better respond to the dynamic nature of our business since implementing an IT strategic planning process two years ago. As a result, we have been able to better align IT investments with Intel corporate strategies, and better manage our IT budget to improve the business value of IT.

These resources provide insight into our strategic planning process and three key IT initiatives for 2011.

<h3>IT Strategic Planning Process</h3> Using a regular and rigorous annual planning cycle has helped us to instill agility into the organization, better align with the business and anticipate trends like, Cloud Computing, IT Consumerization and Social Computing.	<h3>IT Consumerization</h3> Embracing consumerization and enabling personal handhelds to boost employee productivity were initiatives started in response to core business and technology trends identified in our IT strategic plan.
<h3>Cloud Computing</h3> Transforming our traditional enterprise infrastructure to a private cloud was a direct result of an opportunity to improve efficiency and agility which emerged during our 2009 long-range planning efforts.	<h3>Social Computing and Collaboration</h3> Enabling social computing as a means to boost collaboration demanded a multi-year effort to that has resulted in a re-design of our approach to enterprise security.

Social Computing and Collaboration

Developing an Enterprise Social Computing Strategy

Social computing has made it easier for our employees to collaborate and be more productive. Giving our employees the resources, tools and training to collaborate can help reduce security risks. Read the steps we took to help shape the policies and guidelines for social computing: http://download.intel.com/it/pdf/Developing_an_Enterprise_Social_Computing_strategy.pdf

Intel IT Enables Collaboration

Intel CIO, Diane Bryant and Intel CISO, Malcolm Harkins discuss the importance of making your workforce more productive by supporting a range of mobile platforms, hand-held devices and collaboration solutions. Watch this short video: <http://youtu.be/gXiRIT-A-r8>
